Why go hiking on the Dingle Way?

- ✓ Ever wanted to visit "the most beautiful place on Earth"? Well, now you can! In 2006, the National Geographic Traveller magazine officially bestowed this title upon the Dingle Peninsula.
- ✓ Of course, Hollywood has known about this magical spot for years - so it is no surprise at all that the makers of the recent Star Wars movies have chosen Dingle as a key filming location.
- ✓ But Dingle is not all about beauty. With a vast array of archaeological monuments and historical artefacts, there's plenty of history too...

About the Dingle Way

For the most part, this walking tour follows the official trail of the Dingle Way (Slí Chorca Dhuibhne in Gaelic), a 179km (112 mile) long National Waymarked Trail around the Dingle Peninsula in County Kerry. The official beginning and end of the circular route is Tralee, the capital of Kerry.

The diversity of landscapes is one of the reasons why the Dingle Way is such a popular trail. It never takes long before a turn in the path reveals a dramatic change of scenery. From walking in the foothills of Slieve Mish to crossing the shoulder of Mount Brandon, from the crashing waves of the Atlantic Ocean at Slea Head to the tranquil setting of pastoral farmland and golden beaches around Castlegregory. The Dingle Way invigorates the senses.

For those who love history and culture, some of the finest archaeological sites in Ireland can be encountered on the Dingle Way. Standing stones, ogham stones and a multitude of beehive huts are the most obvious structures to be spotted en route. Tralee and Dingle Town itself (An Daingean) are renowned cultural hubs of Ireland – it won't take long to find some traditional music and Irish 'craic' in these locations.
